

Surgical Innovations (SI), the designer and manufacturer of creative solutions for minimally invasive surgery ('MIS') and their UK distributor Elemental Healthcare invited eight healthcare professionals to the SI headquarters in Leeds for a training day.

The event took place in September, with the aim to collaborate closer with members of the nursing sector in order to continue serving the clinical need.

All nurses are working in different hospitals across the London area and have been using different ranges of SI products, including YelloPort+plus™. It was a great opportunity for SI and Elemental Healthcare to receive feedback on our products and service, and we were delighted to hear about the interest in 3mm instruments.

A roundtable discussion between SI's Design team, CEO Graham Bowland, co-founder Professor Mike McMahon and the nurses was organised as part of the event. The visit included a tour around the manufacturing facilities and a scissor-building exercise in the Clean Room.

Everyone agreed: "The UK is a tough and very competitive market. It is essential for us to compare products and prices in order to save money. YelloPort+plus™ is great because it meets those criteria and it is also a very high-quality product range."

"The idea that it is partly disposable is brilliant. There really is a lot of innovation within Surgical Innovations."
