

Surgical Innovations (SI) was delighted to be on BBC Radio Leeds' breakfast show this morning with Georgey Spanswick talking about the importance of parental engagement within apprenticeship schemes.

SI runs a proactive apprenticeship scheme across the organisation to nurture young talent. It currently has 11 apprentices on the scheme, with one person already progressing into full time employment within the company.

As part of this scheme SI's continually engages with parents to ensure they have a first-hand view of what their child will be doing through the duration of the 4 year apprenticeship. This helps give parents confidence in the scheme and highlights that there is always an 'open door' policy for both the apprentice and their parents.
