

Surgical Innovations Group Plc is delighted to be shortlisted for the Best Communications Award at this year AIM Awards.

The Investor Relations team at Surgical Innovations is responsible for maintaining effective two-way communications between the Group and its investor community and have mediums in place to communicate to all levels of investors.

Over the last year the Group has launched a new dedicated investor website designed specifically to target investor audiences. News on the site is updated regularly and all investors have the opportunity to sign-up for email alerts.

The Group also runs a focussed Public Relations programme to ensure the two-way communications with our investor audiences is consistent and that they are correctly informed of our latest developments.

Graham Bowland CEO at Surgical Innovations, said: "Being shortlisted for the Best Communications Award is testament to the quality and dedication of the new team we have specifically created to enhance communications to all our stakeholders. We take communications seriously and have put in place lots of measures to ensure our messages are focussed and consistent and that all stakeholders are communicated to on a regular basis. "

The AIM Awards identify the quoted companies and entrepreneurs who have harnessed AIM to help them fulfil their ambition and growth potential in the last twelve months. The Awards will be presented at the AIM Awards Dinner on 11 October 2012 and attracts over 1,300 guests from the AIM community.